

CULTIVATING THE SKY:

HOW THE ETHICS OF FOOD MATTERS
TO THE POLITICS OF CLIMATE CHANGE

Willis Jenkins

Thursday, March 31, 7 p.m.

Lundring Events Center

Livestream Link: CalLutheran.edu/live

Engage: #CLUfaithculture

Willis Jenkins writes and teaches about issues at the intersections of religious and philosophical ethics, climate change and theology. In this lecture, he will outline a "moral ecology of food" that relates to how communities address the effects of climate change. Jenkins is an associate professor of religious studies and director of graduate studies at the University of Virginia, where he earned both a master's and Ph.D. in religious studies. He is a former director of UVA's Environmental Humanities program and previously taught at Yale University Divinity School.

Admission is free.

For more information, contact Sam Thomas at (805) 493-3693 or sthomas@CalLutheran.edu.

Sponsored by the Segerhammar Center for Faith and Culture, the Center for Equality and Justice, and the SEEd (Sustainable Edible Education) Project at Cal Lutheran.

California Lutheran University

SEGERHAMMAR CENTER
FOR FAITH AND CULTURE